Namibia—A New Nation
A Trust Fulfilled

The United Nations Postal Administration will issue a set of six stamps on 10 May 1991 to celebrate the birth of a new nation, Namibia.

Shortly after midnight on 21 March 1990, after decades of struggle, the South African flag was lowered and the flag of Namibia, a newly independent State, was raised. The achievement of independence was most importantly a victory for Namibia but was a global victory as well. The birth of this nation also signalled a stunning success for the United Nations. Determined to enable the people of this Territory to live in freedom and peace, the United Nations launched one of the largest and most complex operations it has ever put into the field—the United Nations Transition Assistance Group (UNTAG). This effort was the culmination of 70 years of concerted action from the organized international community, dating back to the League of Nations.

UNTAG's effort proved immensely fruitful—97 per cent of the electorate voted in peaceful elections from 7 to 11 November 1989. A fully democratic Constitution was approved on 9 February 1990 and 21 March 1990 was the official date of independence. One week later, in his final report to the Security Council, the Secretary-General of the United Nations, Javier Pérez de Cuéllar, stated, "Thus was achieved in dignity and with great rejoicing the goal of independence for Namibia for which the United Nations and its Member States have striven for so long".
